Top academic achievers honored

Spencer: one of two with highest possible mark among 10,000 undergrads

UVic's top academic achievers for 1983-84 were honored at the annual Awards Recognition Ceremony Oct. 24 in the University Centre Auditorium.

Close to 1,000 students received scholarships, bursaries or other awards for the 1984-85 academic year.

Topping the list of more than 10,000 undergraduates who wrote examinations in May were two stu-dents who both earned a remarkable Grade Point Average (GPA) of 9, the equivalent of A-plus in all

Both are now in fourth-year studies in Arts and Science. Philip Spencer is taking a combined honors program in physics and mathematics while Lloyd Tefft is enrolled in an honors program in Russian Tefft is enrolled in an honors program in Russian and Germanic studies.

Spencer and Tefft received R.T. Wallace Commemorative Scholarships of $1,400 for their achievements. In addition Tefft received The Custom Travel Scholarship of $500, a Frank and Margaret Gibbs Scholarship of $300 and the Prize of the Ambassador of Switzerland to Canada.

Among scholarships awarded to Spencer were a B.W. Pearse Science Scholarship of $400 and the Mark E. Mooney Memorial Scholarship of $225.

The ceremony recognized recipients of scholarships and bursaries administered by UVic as well as graduate studies awards.

Joseph Cunliffe, chairman of the Board of the University of Victoria Foundation, said the Foundation now administers funds of $6.6 million with about $1.6 million from donors specifically for scholarships, bursaries and awards. For 1983-84 $173,000 was awarded to 298 UVic undergraduate students through Foundation funds.

Cunliffe pointed out that faculty and staff at UVic this year have donated considerable funds to be used for student aid. "I see this as an outstanding demonstration of commitment to this university and its students by the faculty and staff," said Cunliffe.

The prestigious Wallace Scholarships were awarded to three other top students, along with Spencer and Tefft.

Recipients of Wallace Scholarships included Josephine Chirico in the Faculty of Education, Sandra Griffin in the Faculty of Human and Social Development and Gloria Wong in the Faculty of Fine Arts.

Three students who received GPAs of 8.9 for 1983-84 were recipients of several scholarships.

Eric Prossnitz, in fourth-year studies in Arts and Science, received the Terry Fox Scholarship of $750 awarded by the Victoria Real Estate Board for studies in Biochemistry and Microbiology. He also received a Gibbs Scholarship of $300, a UVic Faculty Association Scholarship of $500, a B.W. Pearse Scho-

Recognized at the ceremony were winners of $2,000
T.S. McPherson Entrance Scholarships for 1984-85, including Kimberley Bryant, Susan Danard, Toni Foster, Deborah James and Ute Prael. Students receiving $2,000 McPherson Scholarship renewals included Milena Andrews, Michelle Brousson, Heidi Grasswick, Erik Jensen, Azmina Karim, Nina Langton, Anna Larson, Richard Olfert and Paul Rensing.

Brian Smith, Attorney-General of British Columbia, was the guest speaker at the ceremony. Just before he spoke, someone in the audience delivered a short statement challenging the presence of a representative of the provincial government. The statement was ignored by Smith and most of the audience. Smith, an alumnus of Victoria College, pointed out that he was not at the ceremony to talk from a political point of view. He did say that the time was right "to put behind us all the doom and gloom and negativism, from both the fiscally fussy politicians and the defensive overreacting academics".

Malahat seeks subscribers to balance funding cuts

Scobie: 'The Malahat is something of an institution in Canada'

By Donna Danylchuk

The Malahat Review is planning a major subscription drive to attempt to ensure the survival of UVic's nationally and internationally-recognized literary quarterly.

"We're working very close to the line.
Like everyone else, we're in need of funds," says associate editor Dr. Stefunds," says associate editor Dr. Stephen Scobie, who is a Governor-General-Award-winning poet and professor with the UVic English Department.

The quarterly's editor, Dr. Constance Rooke, of the English Department, is in Toronto this year and Scobie is acting as editor in The Malahat offices in the UVic Department of Creative Writing.

For many years UVic has been the publication's major source of funds, but in the past few years the university has cut down its support, Scobie explains. "It's difficult," says Scobie. "Given the financial situation the university is in, The Malahat may appear as a lux-ury. But, The Malahat Review is one of UVic's major contributions to Canadian culture, one of the reasons why UVic is known across Canada in literary circles. The Malahat is something of an institution in Canada. It's of value in itself and to the university. It represents UVic culturally, not only in Canada

The quarterly's major source of funding now is the Canada Council, which provides about $10,000 per year. UVic provides about $8,000 and the B.C. Cultural Fund gives about $5,000.

"The Canada Council has been very good to us and we're had a seven very good to us, and we've had assurances of continued support from them." But, Scobie is concerned about what could happen if funds from other sources are cut back any further.

"We don't know what will happen next year...We are launching a subscription drive later this year, and looking at all other sources of funds."

It's a magazine which should have a

It's a magazine which should have a higher subscription list—the list now is just short of 600, Scobie says. He and Rooke are hoping to increase the annual subscription list by at least 200 through a large-scale mailing subscription drive to likely target areas.

'The more subscriptions we get, the easier it is to argue our case with Canada Council and the B.C. Cultural Fund. We're looking at all other sources of funding. Our major hopes are the Canada Council increasing absorbition. ada Council, increasing subscriptions and finding new ways to cut costs.

Scobie recounts what was said about The Malahat on a feature about literary The Malahat on a feature about literary magazines which was carried on the program CBC Stereo Morning earlier this year. Sam Solecki of the University of Toronto spoke very highly of the quarterly and advised listeners, if they had to make the choice and subscribe to only one literary magazine in Canada, to subscribe to The Malahat.

The publication was started 17 years

The publication was started 17 years ago by Prof. Robin Skelton, now of the UVic Department of Creative Writing, and Dr. John Peter, deceased, former member of the Department of English. "It has a very high international reputation, which Robin built up," says Scobie. There are 150 American University libraries and 45 foreign-listed universities on the review's subscription list, and ties on the review's subscription list, and it gets a very high submission list from overseas, as well as translations of foreign poetry.

Rooke took over the editorship when Skelton retired from the post a year ago.

Skelton retired from the post a year ago. She and Scobie have brought out five issues so far including the latest which came out at the end of October.

"Connie and I have shifted a bit more to Canadian writers, but will continue to welcome translations and foreign submissions. We do plan to retain its international stature," says Scobie.

The material in the quarterly by both well known and new writers, is being published for the first time. The editors are always on the lookout for unknown, promising writers. They intend to devote one issue per year to a particular writer promising writers. They intend to devote one issue per year to a particular writer or theme. They are planning a future issue on political writing in Canada, and another special issue on new stories by and essays about John Metcalfe, Canadian fiction writer and critic.

Rooke's editorial emphasis is on fiction and Scobie's on poetry. In the quarterly's solid review section "the eclectic tastes of the editors are most evident," says Scobie.

The editors customarily devote a feature in each issue to new visual work in photography or art.

A year's subscription to The Malahat costs $15, and a special student rate of $10 is offered. Copies are also available in the UVic and other bookstores.

Cambridge gift unveiled

A link between the 778-year-old Cambridge University and UVic has been forged on UVic's 21st birthday.

At a ceremony held in conjunction with the Awards Recognition Ceremony Oct. 24 in the University Centre Auditorium, G.B. Skelsey, assistant to Cambridge President Prof. Sir John Butterfield, presented to UVic a portrait of the young Queen Victoria.

Skelsey also announced the establishment of a pilot scholarship, jointly ment of a pilot scholarship, jointly funded by Cambridge and UVic, which will bring a UVic Ph.D. student to Cambridge to study in October of 1985.

"We have been aware for some time of the difficulties experienced by Canadian students wishing to come to Cambridge as a result of the higher fees now charged by our government to people from outside Europe," said Skelsey.

"To mitigate this we have set up, under the chairmanship of the Prince of Wales, a Cambridge Commonwealth."

are establishing this pilot scholarship which we hope can become a permanent reminder of this anniversary."

President Dr. Howard Petch, in thank ing the Cambridge representative for the painting and the participation in the joint scholarship, said efforts would be made to endow the scholarship.

"I know, from personal experience, the value of taking at least one year of university studies in another country," said Petch. He said the year he spent at the Cavendish Laboratory in Cambridge as the first Rutherford Memorial Fellowship winner was "possibly the most productive period of my research career".

Petch said B.C. universities have recently implemented a foreign fee differential and universities, generally, have done the same. The result has been a drastic decline in the number of international students.

"The world is poorer for this change," he added.

Petch said UVic was delighted to receive the portrait from "one of the world's most illustrious and excellent

The large portrait of Queen Victoria at 22 years of age is one of a number of copies of the great state portrait of the queen by court painter F.X. Winterhalter. The original portrait is in the Royal Collection at Windsor Castle and it is estimated that no more than a half dozen copies were made.

Skelsey explained that with the Queen's death in 1901 this particular painting came into the possession of an old member of Cambridge who gave it to the university in 1924. It hung for 15 years in the university examination school and was stored during the Second World War. World War.

After the war the examination school vas rebuilt and the portrait was forgotten in storage for 30 years.
Skelsey explained that it was through the persistence of UVic professor Dr. S.W. Jackman (History) that the painting was rediscovered.

"I knew there was a portrait some where and it was while we were working on the restoration of a statue of Prince Albert, the Queen's husband, that we found it," said Jackman, who travels often to Cambridge.

A few years later the Cambridge Council of the Senate, at the suggestion of Prince Philip, the current Chancellor of Cambridge, decided to restore the portrait and present it to UVic.

Skelsey pointed out that the original portrait's date is 1842, the same year that Fort Victoria was first established on Vancouver Island by the Hudson's Bay Company.

Skelsey delivered a message from Prince Philip, who has received an honorary degree from UVic. Philip said that while there is "a slight gap" between the dates of the foundation of the two universities, "in spite of that, both are trying to do the same thing. "There is no panacea for the world's problems, but a great deal depends on the moral and intellectual qualities which universities can instill into their students as many of them will certainly become leaders and opinion formers in the future.

"I very much hope that the gift of Queen Victoria's portrait will symbolize and strengthen the connections between one of the oldest and one of the newst of the Commonwealth's universities

The portrait will hang in the McPherson Library.

Five Chinese scholars help to forge a link

Three faculty members from East China Normal University (ECNU), UVic's sis-ter university in Shanghai, and two faculty members from the University of International Business and Economics in Beijing (Poking) in Beijing (Peking) are pursuing Master of Education (M.Ed.) programs at UVic

Cheng Hai-po and Shen Yueshan, the two scholars from Beijing, work at the Canada-China Language centre. Dr. Jan Walls was partially responsible for the establishment of the Centre during the two years he served as First Secretary for Cultural and Scientific Affairs the Canadian Embassy in Beijing before his return to UVic in 1983.

The Canadian International Development Association (CIDA) and their university in Beijing sponsor Cheng and Shen. Both men were chosen to continue their studies of Canadian language and culture based on the results of two exams lasting six hours each that tested, among other things, their knowledge of the English language.

Ten teachers from the Canada-China Language Centre are taking advanced training at Canadian universities. The others are in Halifax, Toronto, and

The three faculty members from ECNU in Shanghai were selected in much the same manner as other graduate students at UVic in that they submitted application forms outlining their academic and research backgrounds and were given entrance on the basis of these. Shi Liang-fang and Cao Qiu-ping are in the second year of their M.Ed. program here while Zhang Minlun started this Fall. Zhang was here for a month last year however as part of an educational delegation from ECNU.

Shi and Cao are sponsored by the International Development Research Centre (IDRC) in Ottawa while Zhang holds a UVic fellowship. IDRC has assisted the development of the relationship between UVic and ECNU with a $250,000 grant over four years that was given to the project in 1983.

The sister relationship between ECNU and UVic grew from individual contacts developed by people such as Dr. Ted Owen (Education), the present coordinator of an educational research project involving the two universities. In 1981 a formal relationship was established during an official visit to ECNU by a delegation from UVic headed by President Dr. Howard Petch. The granting of an honorary degree from UVic to the revered Chinese leader and champion of social rights, Soong Ching Ling pion of social rights, Soong Ching Ling during the official visit further streng-thened the bond between China and

When the five scholars now working on their M.Ed. degrees at UVic have finished their program, they will return to ished their program, they will return to their universities to continue their teaching and research duties. They came here not to get better jobs but to enable them to do their jobs better. "We want to improve our competency in Canadian language and culture," says Shen.

"In Canada, people seem to change jobs often," observes Zhang. "In China we usually keep the same type of job for life. If you don't keep a job in the same area and build up your skills, you are always a layman."

While any visitor from China to Canada would expect considerable differences in many areas of life, the five Chinese M.Ed. students at UVic have found one of the most interesting and sometimes most troublesome to be the difference in attitude towards age in the two countries. They have found Canadians to be more sensitive about their age than peo-ple in China and less willing to respect older people.
"In China we train younger people to respect the elderly and indeed most young people want to live with older people," says Zhang.

"Respect doesn't necessarily mean that we do what older people say," claims Cao. "It is rather an understand-ing concerning the elderly and their role."

The age composition of classes at UVic graphically demonstrates to the five Chinese scholars the difference in attitudes between the two countries with regard to age and job mobility. "In China, our university students are mostly young people who will take four or five years of continuous training to attain their university graduation provided that they maintain standards," explains Zhang.

explains Zhang.

"In Canada you have a credit system and many older people taking part in the same classes as the younger students. Both countries have in-service programs for professionals already in the field but in China the older people do not study with the young."

While official delegations and visits between China and UVic strengthen the between China and CVIC strengthen the bond between the two, the work neces-sary to make the relationship bear fruit is being done by scholars such as these five graduate students struggling to complete courses that most find difficult enough without having to take them in a econd language or in a country far from family and friends.

Trust is the key

Dear Sir:

I was surprised and delighted to see a photo of my associate Margaret Burke, and student Patrice Kydd experiencing a Blind Walk in the October 12th copy of the Ring.

Although an experience of this nature does indeed 'sharpen sensory awareness' in the participants, its primary function is to provide an analogy which crystalizes and deepens their understanding of teaching (having sight) and being taught (without sight). You might be interested in one student's response to the exercise.

What I learned today about being taught:
* if I take a risk and trust my teacher and s/he lets me down it can never be the same again. *I need a caring and supportive attitude from my teacher and environment conducive to my growth. I don't want to feel s/he will belittle or laugh at me.
*if I feel comfortable I can explore and learn with natural innocence and curiosity

What I learned about teaching *sophisticated perception skills are required to know when to slow down, to speed up, to touch or not to touch, to speak or to be quiet, to support or to allow the students the freedom to

* it is important to provide an atmosphere in which the student can discover for himself; a healthy supportive atmosphere encourages exploration and risk.

exploration and risk.

*I was a better leader once I had been led—as a teacher I should become, not the eyes, but the glasses, to help students to see things and understand them a little more clearly.

Yours sincerely,

Faculty perform

Performance faculty of the School of Music are featured in a concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Music

The recital is part of the school's popular Chamber Music Series.
Violinist Paul Kling, cellist Linda Hougland-Daniels, and pianist Robin Wood are featured in Smetana's Trio in G minor.

Samuel Barber's Summer Music, evocative of childhood scenes in a small town, will be performed by the School's ensemble-in-residence, the Pacific Wind Quintet. The ensemble is made up of Lanny Pollet (flute), Suzanne Lemieux (oboe), Thomas Dowling (clarinet), Jesse Read (bassoon), and Richard Ely (horn). Bruce Vogt, performing on the School's fortepiano (an exact replica of Mozart's instrument) is featured in W.F. Bach's Sonata in G Maior.

It all came down to a single goal in the battle for first place in Canada West University Athletic Association (CWUAA) soccer play. The schedule ended Oct 27 with the UVic Vikings and University of British Columbia Thudnerbirds tied for top spot with identical records of six wins, two defeats and a tie. UVic wound up their CWUAA season with a 3-1 victory over the University of Alberta while UBC was trouncing the University of Lethbridge 7-0. To decide who would represent the west in the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union (CIAU) championship game, it came down to the two teams' records against each other. UBC scored one more goal than UVic in their two meetings, which the teams split, and thus were given first
